Thames Valley Group Supper Seminar:

With D-J Gent PSAg, Agriculture Manager, Environment Agency

Tuesday 24th November at 19.00

‘Agriculture in Transition: Delivering better outcomes for water, farming and the environment.’

D-J Gent is an Agriculture Manager, currently working on Water Reform. His core role is to lead the Environment Agency’s contribution to the management and delivery of the Environmental Land Management Scheme (ELMS).

Farmers are central to England’s countryside, managing over two-thirds of the land, producing food, shaping landscapes and contributing to water management and climate resilience. Yet agriculture remains one of the largest sources of water pollution, with serious pollution incidents showing little sign of decline. The sector now operates at the intersection of three major pressures: increasing climate volatility, rising regulatory expectations and growing public and political focus on water quality and nature recovery. How can we respond to deliver better outcomes for water, farming and the environment?
